Did you know...?

While honeybees get a lot of the credit, at least 1,500 insect species pollinate plants in the UK. In some parts of the world, birds, bats and even lizards get involved too!

Beetles are attracted to flat, open flowers which allow them to graze, and flowers in clusters, such as cow parsley. The flowers tend to be smelly or fragrant, because beetles navigate by a strong sense of smell.

Cereals, such as wheat and barley, rely on wind pollination but just about every other plant we eat is actively pollinated. Tomato production relies on pollination by bumblebees, as do many other crops.

Adult butterflies and moths will feed on almost any flower's nectar, but caterpillars are fussier, so try planting a variety of flowers to encourage more insects to visit your garden.

Things you can do to help:

1. Grow pollinator-friendly plants in your garden or on your windowsill
2. Let your lawn grow a little wilder
3. Build a home for solitary bees

For an animal to be an effective pollinator it needs to actively visit flowers of the same species and be capable of carrying pollen on its body (often unintentionally) so that it transfers from one flower to another.

There are just 57 resident butterfly species in the UK, compared to more than 2,500 moth species.

The list of insect pollinators is long and includes many different species of bees, flies, wasps, beetles, butterflies and moths. Pollinators carry pollen with them as they move from flower to flower.

Introduction

Welcome to A Blooming British Afternoon Tea in collaboration with the Natural History Museum; a floral-inspired twist on a quintessentially British tradition, in a celebration of the beautiful flowers and precious pollinators on our doorstep.

Taking inspiration from artworks held within the Museum's archives, their newly transformed gardens that provide a haven for people and wildlife, and the idyllic 30-minute nature walk across leafy Hyde Park that brings us together, our talented pastry team have created a thoughtful menu that beautifully honours the elegance of British flora and fauna, using locally-sourced, seasonal ingredients.

This special collaboration combines the Museum's expertise and work to protect the natural world, with our ongoing sustainability efforts, and a shared passion for pollinators, a commitment Royal Lancaster London continues to uphold to this day.

Together, we support a future where people and pollinators thrive.
